In 1820 Neil Livingston and his wife, Janet McNair, sailed to America in a sail boat. On November 20 they landed in Quebec and went to a hotel to spend the night. During the night Mrs. Livingston gave birth to a baby girl. They named her Janet. When Mrs. Livingston was able to travel, they moved to the backwoods of Canada. Janet was the youngest of four girls and there were four boys born while they lived in the backwoods. Mr. Livingston built their first home out of trees which he cut and shaped with his own hands. They tilled the soil and tried to make a living there. But there wasn't enough to keep a family of ten so Mr. Livingston left to find work some place else to help out but he was never heard of after.

By this time the two oldest girls were old enough to go out and work for their living so they went to Detroit, Michigan, and found positions. Sarah was the oldest in the family and she worked and saved to help their mother to save more money they would give the money they saved for

As soon as Margaret and Janet arrived in Detroit Margaret was a lady's maid and worked hard and saved everything for her four boys.

Sarah and Mary met their mother the rest of their lives. Margaret and Mary were neighbors of the Gardners. Margaret they were married and

Janet did not come with her mother. She had known the other boys they were all married except Al. His brother, William, lost his parents, helped all they could at this particular locality there and William started to build a mill to go to Detroit for some mill to finish the mill. Inasmuch as her husband and brother-in-law

It was a long, hard trip. When they arrived in Detroit they had lots of enjoyment. William and Janet were married and Janet was a widow because she had married a widow's children as much as she did

Some time after she was married they settled. They listened to William was the first of the family. William was a Methodist preacher and got his other brothers into the Church who joined the Church from the (1936) they have never joined.

After they had joined the Church in Nauvoo. Of course and the tendency was to gather what they had in Canada and move to see two of her daughters which she did not believe. She probably she would never see after they left. The last time a little hill not far from the white handkerchief. After her mother had passed away.

When William's first wife died his wife's mother took the baby and he went to get his son to take the oldest in the family and she found a position as a serving maid. They worked and saved to help their mother keep the rest of the family. In order to save more money they would walk from Detroit to their home in Canada and give the money they saved for stage fare to their mother.

As soon as Margaret and Janet were old enough they also had to go to work. Margaret was a lady's maid and Janet was a helper in the kitchen. The four girls worked hard and saved everything they could to help support their mother and the four boys.

Sarah and Mary met their husbands in Detroit and made their homes there the rest of their lives. Margaret and Janet married Gardner brothers. The Gardners were neighbors of the Livingstons and when Archibald fell in love with Margaret they were married and lived in the old Gardner home.

Janet did not come with Margaret. She stayed in Detroit working to help her mother. She had known the Gardner family before she went to Detroit but they were all married except Archibald. Soon after Margaret married Archibald his brother, William, lost his wife. Archibald and Margaret, together with his parents, helped all they could in the raising of the four children. In this particular locality there was good water for mill purposes and Archie and William started to build a mill. It became necessary for Archie and William to go to Detroit for some mill stones and other materials before they could finish the mill. Inasmuch as Margaret had a sister in Detroit she accompanied her husband and brother-in-law to Detroit.

It was a long, hard trip to Detroit and took a long time. When they arrived in Detroit they had lots of shopping to do and, of course, they had lots of enjoyment. William and Janet fell in love and in order to save expenses they were married and Janet went home as a bride. Her mother was heartbroken because she had married a widower but she was very happy with him and loved his children as much as she did her own.

Some time after she was married some Mormon missionaries came to the settlement. They listened to what they had to say and soon joined the Church. William was the first of the family to join and his wife soon followed him. William was a Methodist preacher before he joined the Church and he helped get his other brothers into the Church. Janet and Margaret were the only ones who joined the Church from the Livingston family, and so far as is now known (1936) they have never joined. 1 Apr 1843

After they had joined the Church they heard that all the Saints were gathering in Nauvoo. Of course, they wanted to be with the rest of the Saints and the tendency was to gather where other Saints were. They decided to sell what they had in Canada and move to Illinois. Mrs. Livingston was broker-hearted to see two of her daughters leave for an unknown country and for a cause in which she did not believe. She was getting rather old and she knew that in all probability she would never see them again. She never saw nor heard from them after they left. The last the girls saw of their mother she was standing on a little hill not far from their old home waving a final farewell with a little white handkerchief. After ten years had passed the girls heard that their mother had passed away.

When William's first wife passed away, leaving him with four little children, his wife's mother took the baby to raise. When he decided to leave for Nauvoo he went to get his son to take him with him but this boy was the only support
